With him when the end came were his wife and son, Leon Schinast, president of the Importers and Exporters Insurance Company of 17 South William street. Mr. Schinast was born in Egypt, and it was not until he was past his 30th year that he commenced to think of leaving that country to come to the United States. While a young man he worked in the tobacco fields harvesting the crops; then became a factory hand, and with a few pennies at his command started for America.

floor of a ramshackle building at 48 Broad street. From this place several thousand Turkish tobacco eigarettes were turned out weekly. The idea of a foreign product competing with 'he drimestic tobacco did not meet with any wonderful financial success. Meanwhile Mr. Schinasi took his brother Morris into the frm. and the name Schinasi Bros. was secured for trade purposes. Suddenly the demand for Turkish & bacco took a boom. to pick up a private trade from the men of Wall street and came in contact with the late J. P. Morgan. The financier took an interest in the man who dared finally favored the Schingel loft. At this time the American concerns sought to purchase from the newcomer his plant and trade name for $250,000. Mr. Schinasi refused to sell and defied the circle which threatened him.

In 1903 a new factory was opened at 311 West 120th street, where the first cigarette making machinery was operated. From several thousand a week the firm commenced turning out 250,000 cigarettes a day. Three years later the firm commenced turning out 250,000 cigareties a day. Three years later another factory was opened in West 100th street, and with the installation of packing, folding and sealing machinery the firm had a daily output of some 2,000,000 cigarettes.

In March, 1916, the Schinasi brothers, after having fought the tobacco trust for almost twenty-five years, sold their concern to the Tohacco Products Cor-poration and received almost $4,000,000 for their interests. Mr. Schinasi, who al-ways took pride in declaring that he

Mr. Morgan fancied the tobacco man for his interest in art and ceramic coliections. Mr. Schinasi was an expert on Egyptian paintings and antiques. He gave liberally to charitable enterprises and is said to have been supporting no less than fifty families of men in Egypt who were associated with him in his younger days in the tobacco field and factories. At the horse shows Mr. Schinasi gained considerable renown by exhibiting several Arabian stallions which had been presented to him.

He was the possessor of a great collection of diamonds. This collection, which at present is in his home in Paris, had fifty stones noted for their different colors and valued at $1,500,000. During the war Mr. Schinasi turned over to the French Government some $40,000 worth of motor cars from his Paris establishment.

His fortune is said to be in the neighborhood of $40,000,000. His brother. Morris Schinasi, who shared the huge profits of the tobacco business, maintains one of the beautiful homes on Riverial Egyptics. The further is services will be held at 10 o'clock on Monday morning.
